'REAL WORLD' HELP FOR TEACHING SOCIAL COMMUNICATION SKILLS TO CHILDREN WITH AUTISM SPECTRUM DISORDERS IN PRESCHOOL AND ELEMENTARY SETTINGS

Presented by Mary Brown & Pam Dwyer

Tuesday, September 20, 2005
9:00 am - 4:00 pm (8:30 am registration)
PAEC-- 753 West Boulevard
Chipley, Fl 32428

Children with ASD need intensive focus on social language skills. The recent surge of information that has become available on teaching this population can make it difficult for teachers to figure out what is needed and how to incorporate it into the daily routine. This workshop is designed to provide 'Real World' strategies for teaching social and communication skills to young children with Autism Spectrum Disorders. This forum will provide activities and ideas that are easily incorporated into daily classroom schedules thus providing social communication success for all students.

Mrs. Dwyer is a prekindergarten teacher working with children with ASD in an inclusive setting. Mary Brown is a practicing speech and language pathologist who has specialized in teaching social and pragmatic skills to children with ASD. Both presenters will provide information on practical and effective ideas for incorporating visual strategies, social skill development, and communication development into the ongoing school day.

This workshop is appropriate for teachers, therapists, paraprofessionals, parents, or others working or living with young children on the autism spectrum.
