through September 30, 2011

This is an asynchronous book study. Directions for connecting to the book study discussion page will be provided following registration

About the Presenter

Ann-Marie Orlando is a coordinator for educational and training services for the University of Florida Center for Autism and Related Disabilities. In this position, Ann-Marie has worked with school personnel to include students with autism spectrum disorder in the general curriculum.

Description

This online book study will focus on the work of Sonja de Boer titled "Successful Inclusion for Students with Autism". The book is a guide for educators to develop inclusive programs for students with autism spectrum disorders and includes practical and evidence-based strategies for instruction, behavior, and communication. Our book study will be an asynchronous event where the views of each participant are welcomed and valued. Upon registration participants will receive further information for connecting to the book study event.

Presentation Objectives

1. Review aspects autism spectrum disorders and inclusion.
2. Learn considerations for appropriate services, structure, and implementation of inclusion.
3. Understand the steps for implementing an inclusion program for students with ASD.
4. Understand methods for evaluating and maintaining an inclusion program.
