About the Presenter

Training Description

This full-day workshop provides an introduction to the components of executive function and self-regulation (EF/SR) and focuses on their influence on learning and adjustment. Program content will help participants better understand these critical cognitive domains and the behavioral implications of EF/SR deficits in the school setting. The presentation includes an overview of self-management planning and useful take-away strategies designed to help students on the autism spectrum learn how to regulate their behaviors independently and appropriately across home and school contexts. The workshop also offers practical insights, practice recommendations, and an up-to-date review of evidence-based interventions based upon systematic research reviews.

Training Objectives

Participants will be able to:

- Define executive functions in general, understand the relationships among and between the key domains of the executive system and discuss cognitive processing skills as they affect learning, social, emotional, attentional, and behavioral functioning.
- Understand how executive function and self-regulation skills provide critical supports for learning and development.
- Describe a variety of assessment methods available to measure and quantify the child’s profile of executive functions and self-regulatory behavior.
- Define self-management within the context of positive behavior support and list the steps for developing a self-management program.
- Identify evidence-based interventions to strengthen the self-regulation skills of children and youth on the autism spectrum.
